When it comes to the Jews, it's often we sort of underestimate them. The biggest issue with Jews is one that isn't really shared by any other non-White groups, and that is their competency. Jews are not simply non-Aryan, they are anti-Aryan. They represent the only true opposition party in the world, held back by numbers more than anything. The vast majority of the evil deeds of the Jews are only seen that way because it's done by a foreign group against our people, which is entirely fair of course.

I believe it was BAP who said that Israel is the closest thing to a National Socialist country in the modern world, ironically enough. This is accurate, one of the few true ethnostates. Not in the manner of China or some third world countries, where they maintain a definite ethnic power structure, but a state truly concerned with the ethnic makeup of its people & the welfare of those people over any others. If the White ethnostate of Cascadia ever comes to fruition, it will function essentially exactly as Israel does now. Rhodesia, if it continued on, would be in the same boat.

I don't think it's a shock to say that Hitler was effectively a Zionist, most learned this during their Europa: The Last Battle phase. Long before any alleged plans for mass extinction, Hitler wanted Jews in Europe to be sent away to Palestine or Madagascar. Interestingly enough, this actually got the Nazis a good deal of support from many Jews who also wanted a Jewish nation-state. A few groups in Germany & the Lehi in occupied Palestine come to mind. Of course, these plans didn't come to fruition until the West expanded its empire to Jerusalem.

Once Israel formally came to be, there were two factors that would serve as guiding forces in their statecraft. The first being the very fresh memory of the Holobunga, and the next being the fact that they were surrounded by hostile states. This bred a strong desire for sovereignty & highly militaristic culture. Israel, as an independent state, came to be during the 1948 Arab-Israeli war in the wake of both the UN Partition Plan & British pullout from the region. I won't sperg out on the details of the conflict, but it was fairly brutal & Israel certainly set the foundations of what's now their modus operandi.

I don't think the Israelis were wrong to think that the war was an existential threat. The best case scenario, if they lost, was a role reversal where Israelis are the oppressed in their zones. It's very likely that the Arab League would have been quite harsh to the subjugated Jews, so it makes sense that Israel would both fight viscusously in the conflict & establish military superiority in the area at all costs. Besides creating the modern Israeli state, the war was also one of the greatest displacements in recent memory. About 700,000 Arabs were pushed out of Jewish territory. I think anyone who fancies himself along the lines of White Nationalism should study this war specifically, it is potentially a good lesson on something we may have to do as well in the future.

Also noteworthy, the insurgency after the war. In the wake of Israel's victory over the Arabs, many of the now displaced Palestinians (as well as foreign precursors of modern Jihadis) would launch cross border attacks from bordering countries into Israel. Unlike similar experiences of the US during the GWOT, Israel actually did exceptionally well during this period. This conflict is a case study of why "guerrilla warfare" isn't a trump card, and actually fails more often than not. Israel's main strategy was not any delusions of winning hearts & minds, it was to kill as many insurgents & their supporters as possible. The IDF would go out of its way to maximize the bloodshed in order to deter any others from following suit. This strategy proved quite successful both in Palestine & neighboring countries.

I again want to stress that the Arab insurgency, against a still relatively weak Israel, & backed by all Arab governments in the region, failed miserably. Take this as a warning for a wannabe insurgent & as a case study for when the insurgents are our enemies.

The next major event was the infamous Suez Crisis, the first one anyway. The crisis began because the Egyptian government decided to nationalize the Suez Canal, a pivotal point for international trade. Israel also had a special interest with the eastern gulf of the Sinai peninsula. Eventually, Israel conspired with France & Britain to recapture the region from the Arabs. This was actually the key moment that made Israel a 'Western country'. The event also shows that the US had no idea what they were doing during the early years of the Cold War, as they took great issue with invasion. As for Israel, which formed the main ground force for the event, the war strengthened their position in the region as well as giving them considerable influence over the strategically important Suez Canal, strengthening their position globally.

Regions like the Suez Canal are focal points of geopolitics. This is why Egypt never tried to take it again, and why the US destroyed Panama in '89. At the lower level, this is also why cities like LA or NYC have so much influence intranationally. This key fact is why I take issue with claims of a White ethnostate within the US heartland, like Montana or Oklahoma. Other than some farmland & oil fields, both of which are easily accessible elsewhere in the US, there's little strategic benefit to a lowly populated stretch of grassland. At least New England & Cascadia have ocean access & good geography for military & economic means.

The next notable conflict, and one of my personal favorites as a military man, is the Six Day War in 1967. The origins of the conflict are the same as previous ones, but escalated in the wake of the Suez War. During the time between that & the next conflict, the Arab world mostly ended up becoming allied with the Soviets. This is why I said earlier that the US was retarded for opposing the Tripartite Alliance during the Suez War, anyone could see this coming. The US effectively shot itself (and the rest of NATO) in the foot by not seizing control of the Canal & toppling Egypt a decade prior, Israel fixed it in 1967.

As part of the Soviets' game, they sought to further advance the conflict for their own purposes. This led to Egypt doing the same thing as the previous crisis, expelling UN peacekeepers & shutting off Israel from maritime shipping through either coast of the Sinai Peninsula. There were also increasingly intense acts of aggression from Syria & Jordan, eventually escalating from pot shots to fighter duels. Both Israel & the Arab League began mass mobilization & started preparing for war. Israel pulled one of the most impressive gambits in recent history by attacking first, effectively annihilating a joint military force three times its size in a week. Within the first day, the vast majority of Egypt's air assets were destroyed. Jordanian & Syria forces never left their bases before being neutralized. Israel effectively neutralized all of its hostile neighbors to an extent that none of them have recovered to this day.

This is the sort of boldness necessary for a globally unpopular state to exist. If Rhodesia acted this way, we'd still have her.

A notable episode of this war was the infamous attack on the USS Liberty. You're all familiar with it, it was basically a meme a few years back. Aside from propagandistic rhetoric, the incident was in all likelihood a simple mistake made in the fog of war during a time where the Israeli air force was dropping thousands of bombs everyday on anything even remotely considered a threat. Looking at the actual situation, especially as a military man myself, it's pretty obvious. The only theory that holds water is that Israel made the deliberate decision to "accidentally" destroy the vessel in order to prevent it from leaking info on the upcoming Golan Heights offensive early, but this is ultimately unsubstantiated. It does get some credibility when you learn that Israelis damaged the intelligence gathering equipment of the US Embassy prior to the war itself for similar reasons, though. Most evidence of some conspiracy regarding the incident is based on holes in the official narrative rather than anything concrete. That isn't to say it wasn't covered up in a sense, it absolutely was, but that's just the reality of geopolitics. Regardless, the incident serves as a good tactical asset when trying to break people out of the Conservative judophilla.

The Six Day War led directly into what's called the War of Attrition. This was mostly a phony war, Egypt would launch artillery strikes & occasional raids across the Suez Canal. They didn't have any success, despite open Soviet Bloc support, and the lines didn't change at all. This culminated in the Yom Kippur war in 1973. Despite the claims of some Arab nationalists online, the Arab coalition was once again humiliated by the much smaller IDF. The IDF actually came very close to both Cairo & Damascus, which led to the war ending in terms extremely favorable to Israel. The reasons for Israel's victory once again consists of Israel's aggressive militancy & outright superior fighting forces. Egypt would be forced to formally recognize the state of Israel & functionally end the Arab League as a whole.

Around this time is when the US & Israel became close allies, and led to Arab OPEC members launching an embargo against the US for their support of Israel. This would inevitably lead to the Persian Gulf War.

The next notable incident took place in 1981, Operation Babylon, probably the greatest air raid ever conducted. Part of Israeli self defense strategy is not allowing hostile nations to have anything nice, including Iraq having a nuclear reactor. The Israeli's claim that the facility could theoretically be used to produce nuclear weapons, but honestly it's funnier to think they just hated the idea of Arabs having something cool. Israel sent a flight of F-16s & F-15s to bomb a nuclear reactor under construction in central Iraq, passing over two enemy nations & most of Iraq's airspace in the process. The mission was a total success, the only fire the IADF took was cannon fire during their actual strike. A similar raid on another nuclear site in Syria took place in 2007. While many take issue with unprovoked air raids into sovereign nations, the truth is that Israells are one of the few modern nations that truly understand freedom & its total dependence on power.

I won't be too thorough with the wars against the PLO, Hezbollah, Hamas, etc. that have gone on since the 80's. Mainly because there's very little difference between any of them. What the IDF is doing in Gaza today is functionally the same as the First Lebanon War. Essentially a continuous effort to destroy anti-Israeli forces, push Arabs out of Palestine, and give more space for Israeli Jews. This tactic has been effective, regardless of the cries of moralizers & third worldists.

I'd also just like to take a moment to sperg about the Mossad (and Israel's intel apparatus in general) because it's one of the best in the world. Besides military matters, intelligence is another of my special interests & somewhat related to my career. I am the CIA's biggest fanboy btw. Read about some of the Mossads most notable operations & imagine if it was our guys going against our enemies. Instead of hunting ex-Nazis it's us hunting down every shitlib. Their effectiveness makes sense when you realize that Otto Skorzeny was pivotal in the Mossad's creation. The Mossad is certainly a very key enemy in our struggle, but I'm obliged to give them due respect.

On the topic of intelligence, the Lavon Affair is another thing that became popular along with the USS Liberty Incident, for the same reasons. This is something that only really seems bad if you have no knowledge about what intelligence agencies, regardless of country, actually do. Essentially the plan was to detonate bombs at British & American owned businesses after closing time in order to give those countries a reason to support Israel against Egypt. It was to be falsely blamed on local terrorist groups. Despite its failure & infamy, it's a pretty standard intelligence operation. The CIA & KGB did similar operations fairly often, AntiFa & RW groups actually do this to each other today. Honestly, considering the fact it was planned by Jews, I'm surprised they waited until closing time instead of causing actual casualties to increase the effectiveness.

Lastly, the good old Samson Option. Israel has nuclear weapons, estimated to be roughly 200-400 of various deployment types. This isn't really a secret, nuclear ambiguity is honestly just a running joke for the Israeli government at this point. This capability is why there's probably never going to be another Arab invasion of Israel, it's effectively impossible to win. Ukraine is attempting a similar strategy by trying to develop nuclear weapons right now actually. Anyways, the Samson Option basically means that if Israel gets invaded & loses, they're going to nuke all of their enemies & probably their own occupied territories. It's the national version of cooking a grenade to take some enemies with you. These sorts of things aren't exactly real, it's a deterrent. It's a very powerful reason for your enemies to not invade. The plan is predicated on the notion that if Israel loses, the Jewish population would face another Shoah. At this point, they're probably correct.

So, why do I sperg about the IDF? Because Israel is the poster child of a globally unpopular ethnostate. Any hypothetical White version of Israel will effectively be in the same situation & must take the same approach as the Heebes. For all intents & purposes, Israel is an example of what to do & Rhodesia is an example of what not to do.

The very basis of Israeli statehood is based on ethnic nationalism, which alone is something to be envied. Regardless of any (rightful) disdain for Jews, we shouldn't let that cloud our vision & pretend that what we want isn't essentially a White Israel (in a bleak scenario regarding the rest of the White world, anyway). Instead of buying into low IQ antisemitism & third worldism, recognize that Israel is a case to be mimicked. Everything I've talked about regarding Israel's military actions are things that Hitler would've absolutely done if Germans found themselves in Israel's position, arguably it's analogous to what actually did happen during his war.

No matter what conception you have about White Nationalism, the first of these pro-White states are going to be in the exact same situation as Israel. Surrounded by ethnic & /or ideological hostiles. It would be advantageous to take notes now, and prepare for any eventuality going forward.

I also was of the belief that Mossad was the best intelligence agency in the world, that's why october 7th surprised me so much. Do you think there's any credibility to the belief that they knew about the attack and let it happen so they'd have an excuse to invade.

This really enforces the key idea that the first and most important measure of an authentic and based state is explicitly, legal, nationalist racism.
